

Wednesday thoughts

Last week our topic was rescuing – and following any rescue comes a need to heal the one, or the many who were rescued.

During his days on earth when spreading the news of God, Jesus also gave healing to many sufferers – the blind, the deaf, the lame, the mentally disabled, the diseased and countless other maladies.

But not only that, when he had gone back to heaven he sent the promised helper, in the form of the holy spirit which, in turn, gave an ability to Peter and John to heal - see Acts 5:12-16 (NRSV)

Now in the twentieth year of this twenty- first century the act of healing has never been more vital and valued. We have all learned the priceless worth of anyone today who is connected with the medical profession from ward cleaners to physicians, from nurses to porters, from drivers to caterers – all in their sundry roles are members of the healing society.

Thanks to God for each and every individual.

Blessings everyone
